July 14

Jerusalem captured in First Crusade

During the First Crusade, Christian knights from Europe capture Jerusalem after seven weeks of siege and begin massacring the city's Muslim and Jewish population.

Beginning in the 11th century, Christians in Jerusalem were increasingly persecuted by the city's Islamic rulers, especially when control of the holy city passed from the relatively tolerant Egyptians to the Seljuk Turks in 1071. Late in the century, Byzantine Emperor Alexius Comenus, also threatened by the Seljuk Turks, appealed to the West for aid. In 1095, Pope Urban II publicly called for a crusade to aid Eastern Christians and recover the holy lands. The response by Western Europeans was immediate.

The first crusaders were actually undisciplined hordes of French and German peasants who met with little success. One group, known as the "People's Crusade," reached as far as Constantinople before being annihilated by the Turks. In 1096, the main crusading force, featuring some 4,000 mounted knights and 25,000 infantry, began to move east. Led by Raymond of Toulouse, Godfrey of Bouillon, Robert of Flanders, and Bohemond of Otranto, the army of Christian knights crossed into Asia Minor in 1097.

In June, the crusaders captured the Turkish-held city of Nicaea and then defeated a massive army of Seljuk Turks at Dorylaeum. From there, they marched on to Antioch, located on the Orontes River below Mount Silpius, and began a difficult six-month siege during which they repulsed several attacks by Turkish relief armies. Finally, early in the morning of June 3, 1098, Bohemond persuaded a Turkish traitor to open Antioch's Bridge Gate, and the knights poured into the city. In an orgy of killing, the Christians massacred thousands of enemy soldiers and citizens, and all but the city's fortified citadel was taken. Later in the month, a large Turkish army arrived to attempt to regain the city, but they too were defeated, and the Antioch citadel surrendered to the Europeans.

After resting and reorganizing for six months, the crusaders set off for their ultimate goal, Jerusalem. Their numbers were now reduced to some 1,200 cavalry and 12,000 foot soldiers. On June 7, 1099, the Christian army reached the holy city, and finding it heavily fortified, began building three enormous siege towers. By the night of July 13, the towers were complete, and the Christians began fighting their way across Jerusalem's walls. On July 14, Godfrey's men were the first to penetrate the defenses, and the Gate of Saint Stephen was opened. The rest of the knights and soldiers then poured in, the city was captured, and tens of thousands of its occupants were slaughtered.

The crusaders had achieved their aims, and Jerusalem was in Christian hands, but an Egyptian army marched on the holy city a few weeks later to challenge their claim. The Egyptians' defeat by the outnumbered Christians in August ended Muslim resistance to the Europeans for the time being, and five small Christian states were set up in the region under the rule of the leaders of the crusade.

"Radulfus cognomine Havoth" to Jumièges by charter dated to [1040][875], although presumably the document is misdated. "Domino meo Hugone Gurnaiensi et filio eius Girardo et uxore eius Basilia" consented to a donation to Jumièges abbey by "Radulphus cognomina Havoth cum uxore mea" on his entering the abbey as a monk, by undated charter[876]. "...William de Gornai...Girard de Gornai..." witnessed the charter dated 1082 under which William I King of England donated property to the abbey of la Trinité de Caen[877]. "Odo comes et Stephanus filius eius"[878]. Orderic Vitalis records that "primus Normannorum Stephanus de Albamarla filius Odonis Campaniæ comitis" fortified "castellum suum super Aucium flumen" at the expense of William II King of England and placed there a garrison against "ducem" [Robert III Duke of Normandy] and that "Gornacensis Girardus" followed his example and delivered "Gornacum et Firmitatem et Goisleni Fontem" [Gournay, La Ferté-en-Bray, Gaillefontaine] to the king, dated to [1089/90][879]. Orderic Vitalis records that "comes Ebroicensis" requested Robert [III] Duke of Normandy to return "Bathventum et Nogionem, Vaceium et Craventionem, Scoceium [Bavent, near Troarn, Noyon-sur-Andelle, Gacé, Gravençon, Ecouché, aliosque fundos Radulfi patru mei...Caput Asini" to him and grant "Pontem Sancti Petri" [Pont Saint-Pierre] to "nepoti...meo Guillelmo Bretoliensi", which the duke agreed to, except "Scoceium" which was held by "Girardus de Gornaco...qui de eadem parentela prodierat, filius...Basiliæ Girardi Fleitelli filiæ", dated to [1089][880].

He and his wife participated in the First Crusade but he died before the capture of Jerusalem[881]. Albert of Aix names "...Gerardus de Gorna..." among those who took part in the siege of Nikaia, dated to mid-1097 from the context[882]. Baudry names "Girardus de Gornaio" among those on the First Crusade in 1097[883]. Guillaume of Jumièges records that "Giraldus" left for Jerusalem but died while away[884].

Henry II King of England confirmed the possessions of the abbey of Bec, including donations by "Hugonis de Gornaco et Girardi filii...Girardi de Gornaio et Basilie matris sue", by charter dated to [1181/89][885]. This donation is by Gerard de Gournay ad Basilie, the parents of Gerard de Gournay.

[I'm firstly ---. As discussed below, one possibility for the parentage of Amicie, wife of Richard Talbot, is that she was the daughter of Gérard de Gournay by an earlier otherwise unrecorded marriage.] m [secondly] ([1084/92]) as her first husband, EDIVE [Edith] de Warenne, daughter of WILLIAM [I] de Warenne Earl of Surrey & his first wife Gundred --- ([1072/80]-after 1155). Guillaume of Jumièges records that "Giraldus" left for Jerusalem "cum uxore sua Edithua sorore Willelmi comitis de Warennæ", who married secondly "Drogoni de Monceio", by whom she had "unum filium...Drogonem"[886]. Her birth date is indicated bearing in mind that she had children by both her marriages. The date of her first marriage is estimated assuming that she was about 12 years old at the time. She married secondly Dreux [I] Seigneur de Moncy. Her second marriage is confirmed by Orderic Vitalis who names "Hugo filius Girardi de Gornaco" and "Drogo, vitricus eius"[887]. Gérard & his [first/second] wife had [one child]:

i) [AMICIE de Gournay (before [1085]-[after 1100]). Her marriage and family connection are indicated by Orderic Vitalis who records that "Hugo filius Girardi de Gornaco" rebelled against King Henry I after the marriage of his sister Gundred in Jun [1118], and captured "municipium...Plessicii" which he granted to "nepoti eius Hugoni Talabot"[888]. The passage indicates that Hugh Talbot was at least a young adult at the time, so not born later than [1100], which would place his mother's birth no later than [1085]. There are therefore at least three possibilities for her parentage. Firstly, if she was the child of Gérard de Gournay by his known wife Edive de Warenne, Edive would have been born in the early part of her estimated birth date range shown above and Amicie born soon after the marriage. Secondly, given that that chronology is tight, Amicie could have been the daughter of Gérard by an earlier otherwise unrecorded marriage. Thirdly, the word "nepos" in Orderic could indicate a more distant family relationship than nephew, maybe first cousin, in which case Amicie could have been the daughter of Hugues [III] de Gournay, although the more remote the relationship the less likely the appointment of Richard Talbot as custodian of the castle by Hugues [IV] de Gournay. On balance, the most likely case appears to be the second. Her name is indicated by two charters of King Henry II: Henry II King of England confirmed the possessions of the abbey of Valmont, including donations by "...Richardi Tallebot et Amicie uxoris eius et Hugonis et Willelmi filiorum suorum...", by charter dated to [1181/83][889]. Henry II King of England confirmed the possessions of the priory of Sainte-Foi de Longueville, including donations by "Ricardi Thalebot et Avitie uxoris sue et Hugonis filii sui", by charter dated to [Mar/Jun] 1189[890]. m RICHARD Talbot, son of ---.]

Gérard & his [second] wife had two children:

ii) HUGUES [IV] de Gournay ([1098/1100]-1180). Orderic Vitalis names "Hugo filius Girardi de Gornaco" and "Drogo vitricus eius"[891].

- see below.

iii) GUNDRED de Gournay ([1100/1105]-after 1155). Guillaume of Jumièges records that "Nigello de Albinneio" married "Gundredam filiam Giraldi de Gornaco" by whom he had "filium...Rogerium de Moubraio"[892]. Orderic Vitalis records the marriage in Jun [1118] of "Hugo filius Girardi de Gornaco...sorore sua...Gundrea...consilio regis" to "Nigello de Albinneio"[893]. In another passage she is named as second wife of Nigel d'Aubigny[894]. The 1130 Pipe Roll records "Gunderede uxori Nig de Albin" in Leicestershire[895]. "Gundreda, uxor Nigelli de Albini" donated property to the Hospital of St Leonard, York by undated charter which names "Rogerio de Molbray filio suo"[896]. An undated charter notes the donation of "Hospitale Sancti Michaelis Archangeli" to Whitby Monastery, at the request of "Dominam Gundredam uxorem Nigelli de Albini" for the soul of "Rogerio de Moubray filio eorum"[897]. m (Jun [1118]) as his second wife, NELE de Albini, son of ROGER de Albini & his wife Amice --- (-21 or 26 Nov 1129).

My 26th Great Grandfather

Title: Notes and sources from Life sketch-

Note: Gurney Rec. of the House of Gournay (: 286-289, 292-293, 776-777 [author alleges that Gerard de Gournay and his wife, Ediva, had a younger son, Walter de Gournay (living 1150), ancestor of the Gurnay family of Norfolk. Such an individual existed but he had no association in the records with the senior branch of the Gournay family. Rather, it appears that Walter was closely related to a Galiena de Gournay, born say 1120, living c. 1170, wife of Manasser de Dammartin (died 1178/9), of Mendlesham and Cotton, Suffolk, Norton Mandeville, Essex, etc. Surviving records show that Manasser de Dammartin enfeoffed Walter de Gumay with a 1/4 knight's fee in Suffolk during the Civil War between King Stephen and Empress Maud. In 1150 Walter de Gournay witnessed a charter to Missenden Abbey for Manasser and Galiena. Charter evidence proves that Galiena was the granddaughter of an unplaced William de Gumay, of Addington, Kent, whose gift to the see of Rochester she confirmed by her own undated charter. Given these facts, it is doubtful that Walter de Gournay was the son of Gerard de Gournay as alleged [see Hasted 4 (1798): 544-545; Copinger Manors of Suffolk 3 (1909): 277-278; Lewis C. Notes: William de Warenne, 1st Earl of Surrey, Lord of Lewes, Seigneur de Varennes (died 1088), was a Norman nobleman created Earl of Surrey under William II Rufus. He is among the few known from documents to have fought under William the Conqueror at the Battle of Hastings in 1066. At the time of the Domesday Survey in 1086, he held extensive lands in 13 counties, including the Rape of Lewes, a tract now divided between the ceremonial counties of East Sussex and West Sussex.

Early career

William was a son of Rodulf or Ralph de Warenne[1] and Emma, and reported to have descended from a sibling of Duchess Gunnor, wife of Duke Richard I. Chronicler Robert of Torigny reported, in his additions to the Gesta Normannorum Ducum of William of Jumièges, that William de Warenne and Anglo-Norman baron Roger de Mortimer were both sons of an unnamed niece of Gunnor. Unfortunately, Robert's genealogies are somewhat confused – elsewhere he gives Roger as the son of William, and yet again makes both sons of Walter de Saint Martin – while several of Robert's stemmata seem to contain too few generations.[2] Orderic Vitalis describes William as Roger's consanguineus – literally a "cousin", more generally a term of close kinship not typically used to describe brothers – and Roger de Mortimer appears to have been a generation older than him.[2][3]

Charters report several earlier men associated with Warenne. A Radulf de Warenne appears in two charters, one dating between 1027 and 1035, the other from about 1050 and naming his wife, Beatrice. In 1059, a Radulf and wife Emma appear along with their sons Radulf and William. These occurrences have typically been taken to represent a single Radulf with successive wives, of which Beatrice was the mother of William and hence identical to the Gunnorid niece described by Robert de Torigny,[4][5] yet the 1059 charter explicitly names Emma as William's mother.[2] Re-evaluation of surviving charters led Katherine Keats-Rohan to suggest that Robert of Torigny compressed two generations into one, as he appears to have done elsewhere, with Radulf (I) and Beatrice being parents of Radulf (II) de Warenne and of Roger de Mortimer – a Roger son of Radulf de Warenne appears in a charter dated 1040/1053 – while Radulf (II) in turn married Emma, and as attested by the 1059 charter, they had as sons Radulf (III) as the heir in Normandy, and William. Associations with the village of Vascœuil led to identification of the Warenne progenitrix with a widow Beatrice, daughter of Tesselin, Viscount of Rouen, who appeared there in 1054–1060. Robert of Torigny shows a different Viscount of Rouen to have married a niece of Gunnor, perhaps suggesting that it was through Beatrice that William de Warenne was linked with Gunnor's family.[2] [a]

William was from the hamlet of Varenne, near Arques-la-Bataille, Duchy of Normandy, now in the canton of Bellencombte, Seine Maritime.[9][10][11] At the beginning of Duke William's reign, Radulf de Warenne was not a major landholder, while William de Warenne as a second son did not stand to inherit the family's small estates. During the rebellions of 1052–1054, the young William de Warenne proved himself loyal to the Duke and played a strong part in the Battle of Mortemer for which he was rewarded with lands confiscated from his kinsman, Roger of Mortemer, including the Castle of Mortimer and most of its lands.[12] At about the same time, he acquired lands at Bellencombte including the castle that became the centre of William de Warenne's holdings in Normandy.[13][14]

Conquest of England

William was among the Norman barons summoned to the Council of Lillebonne by Duke William when the decision was made to oppose King Harold II's accession to the throne of England.[13][15] He fought at Hastings and was rewarded with numerous holdings. Domesday records his lands stretching over 13 counties, including the important Rape of Lewes in Sussex, several manors in Norfolk, Suffolk and Essex, the major manor of Conisbrough in Yorkshire and Castle Acre in Norfolk, which became his headquarters or caput.[13][14] He is one of few proven companions of William the Conqueror known to have fought at the Battle of Hastings in 1066.[16][17][18] He fought against rebels at the Isle of Ely in 1071, where he showed a special desire to hunt down Hereward the Wake, who had killed his brother-in-law Frederick the year before.[19][20] Hereward is supposed to have unhorsed him with an arrow shot.[21]

Later career

Sometime between 1078 and 1082,[22] William and his wife Gundred travelled to Rome, visiting monasteries on the way. In Burgundy they were halted by a war between Emperor Henry IV and Pope Gregory VII. They visited Cluny Abbey and were so impressed by the monks and their dedication that they decided to found a Cluniac priory on their own lands in England, for which William restored buildings for an abbey. They sent to Hugh, Abbot of Cluny, to staff their monastery. At first Hugh was reluctant, but he finally sent several monks, including Lazlo, who was to be the first Abbot. The house founded was Lewes Priory, dedicated to St. Pancras,[23][24] England's first Cluniac priory.[25]

William supported the King in the siege of Saint-Suzanne against some rebellious lords. His loyalty to William II,[19] led to his creation as Earl of Surrey, probably in early 1088.[26] He was mortally wounded at the First Siege of Pevensey Castle, died on 24 June 1088 at Lewes, Sussex, and was buried beside his wife, Gundred, in the chapter house of Lewes Priory.[27][28]

Family

William de Warenne married first, before 1070, Gundred, Countess of Surrey,[29][30] sister of Gerbod the Fleming, 1st Earl of Chester.[31]

William married secondly a sister of Richard Gouet, who survived him.[32]

Issue

By Gundred, William had:

William de Warenne, 2nd Earl of Surrey (died 1138), who married Elisabeth (Isabelle) de Vermandois, widow of Robert de Beaumont, 1st Earl of Leicester[33]

Edith de Warenne, who married first Gerard de Gournay, lord of Gournay-en-Bray, and then Drew de Monchy[34]

Reynold de Warenne, who inherited lands from his mother in Flanders[34] and died c. 1106–1108[35]

A daughter of unknown name, who married Ernise de Coulonces.[36]

He had no issue by his second wife.

Notes: WILLIAM [I] de Warenne, son of RAOUL de Warenne & his [first wife Beatrice ---] ([1035/40]-Lewes 24 Jun 1088, bur Lewes Priory). There is some doubt about the identity of the mother of William de Warenne.

Guillaume of Jumièges names "Willelmus postea comes Surreiæ..." as Raoul's son by his wife Beatrice[1104].

However, an undated charter, quoted more fully below, names them "Rodulfus et uxor eius...Emma ac filii eorum Rodulfus et Willelmus"[1105]. As documents date Raoul's marriage to Emma in [1053/59], the birth of their children of Raoul's second marriage would be dated to [1055/65]. However, reports quoted below indicate that Guillaume de Warenne was active as an adult in Normandy before the English invasion in 1066, which would place his birth to [1035/40]. This all suggests that Guillaume of Jumièges is correct and that the children were born from their father's first marriage. Orderic Vitalis records, in recounting a death-bed speech of William I King of England, that "castrum...Mortui Mari" was granted to "Guillelmo de Guarenna consanguineo eius" after it was confiscated from "Rogerium de Mortuomari" who had helped the escape of a French prisoner after defeating troops of Henri King of France in 1054 "apud Mortuum-Mare"[1106]. According to the Complete Peerage, in [1054], he acquired land at Bellencombe, whose castle became the headquarters of the Warenne family in Normandy, and in 1066 took part in the invasion of England in 1066 and was rewarded with land in 13 counties[1107]. Orderic Vitalis names "...Willermus de Warennæ et Hugo Pincerna..." among the leading lords under Guillaume II Duke of Normandy[1108]. Orderic Vitalis names "...Hugo de Grentemaisnilio et Guillelmus de Garenna..." among those who took part in the battle of Hastings[1109]. Orderic Vitalis records that King William installed "Guillermum Osberni filium" at his new fortress at Winchester ("intra mœnia Guentæ") and appointed him

"vice sua toti regno versus Aquilonem", while he granted "Doveram...totamque Cantiam" to "Odoni fratri suo", and thus he entrusted "his duobus præfecturam Angliæ", seconded by "Hugonem de Grentemaisnilio et Hugonem de Monteforti, Guillelmumque de Garennæ", dated to 1067[1110]. Orderic Vitalis says the king "gave Surrey" to William de Warenne in the chronicler's description of post-conquest grants made by King William, without specifying that he was created earl[1111]. Orderic Vitalis records that King William I granted "Sutregiam" to "Guillelmo de Guarennæ" who had married "Gundredam sororem Gherbodi"[1112]. "Hugo de Flamenvilla" sold property "quam tenebat de domino suo Rodulfo de Warethana in Amundi Villæ...et in Maltevilla...[et] in Flamenvilla" by undated charter which also records that later "supra memoratus Rodulfus et uxor eius...Emma ac filii eorum Rodulfus et Willelmus" confirmed the agreement, signed by "...ipsius Hugonis de Flamenvilla, Rotberti filii eius, Gisleberti filii eiusdem..."[1113]. A charter dated 1074 records that "Rodulfus de Warenna eiusque conjux...Emma cum filiis suis Rodulfo...atque Willelmo" sold land in "quattuor villarum Caletensis pagi, Maltevilla...Flamenvilla, Amundi Villæ et Anglicevilla" to Sainte-Trinité de Rouen, as well as "totius Osulfi Villæ eiusdem Caletensis pagi" sold by "Guillelmo filio Rogerii filii Hugonis episcopi"[1114]. Orderic Vitalis records, in recounting a death-bed speech of William I King of England, that "castrum...Mortui Mari" was granted to "Guillelmo de Guarennæ consanguineo eius" after it was confiscated from "Rogerium de Mortuomari" who had helped the escape of a French prisoner after defeating troops of Henri King of France in 1054 "apud Mortuum-Mare"[1115]. The chronology of the family shows that the grant to William de Warenne must have occurred several years after the confiscation from Roger de Mortimer. "...Willielmi de Guarennæ..." witnessed the charter dated 1082 under which William I King of England granted land at Covenham to the church of St Calais[1116]. Domesday Book records land held by "William de Warenne" in Fratton in Portsdown Hundred in Hampshire; numerous holdings in Norfolk[1117]. Orderic Vitalis says the king "gave Surrey" to William de Warenne in the chronicler's description of post-conquest grants made by King William, without specifying that he was created earl[1118]. Orderic Vitalis records that in Jan 1086 "Guillelmus de Warenna et Baldricus de Chitreio Nicolai filius, atque Gislebertus de Aquila", wanting to avenge the death of "Richerii fratris sui" [Richer de Laigle], unsuccessfully attacked the besiegers of the castle of Sainte-Suzanne[1119]. He supported King William II against the rebels led by Eudes Bishop of Bayeux and Robert Comte de Mortain in early 1088 and was rewarded by being created Earl of Surrey in [late Apr] 1088: Orderic Vitalis records that King William II appointed "Guilelmum de Guarennæ" as "comitem Suthregiæ", and adds that he was later buried at Lewes, dated to [1088/89][1120]. He and his immediate successors usually styled themselves "Earl de Warenne". He was mortally wounded at the siege of Pevensey[1121]. William I King of England donated property in Norfolk to Lewes priory, for the souls of "...Gulielmi de Warenna et uxoris suæ Gundfredæ filiæ meæ" by charter dated to [1080/86], witnessed by "...Michael de Tona...Milonis Crispini..."[1122].

m firstly (1070) GUNDRED, sister of GERBOD "the Fleming" Earl of Chester, daughter of --- (-Castle Acre, Norfolk 27 May 1085, bur Lewes Priory). Orderic Vitalis records that King William I granted "Sutregiam" to "Guillelmo de Guarennæ" who had married "Gundredam sororem Gherbodi"[1123]. "Willelmus de Warenna...Surreie comes [et] Gundrada uxor mea" founded Lewes Priory as a cell of Cluny by charter dated 1080[1124]. This charter also names "domine mee Matildis regine, matris uxoris mee", specifying that the queen gave "mansionem quoque Carlentonam nomine" to Gundred. It is presumably on this basis that some secondary works claim, it appears incorrectly, that Gundred was the daughter of William I King of England. Weir asserts that the charter in question "has been proved spurious"[1125], although it is not certain what other elements in the text indicate that this is likely to be the case. Assuming the charter is genuine, it is presumably possible that "matris" was intended in the context to indicate a quasi-maternal relationship, such as foster-mother or godmother. The same relationship is referred to in the charter dated to [1080/86] under which William I King of England donated property in Norfolk to Lewes priory, for the souls of "...Gulielmi de Warennæ et uxoris suæ Gundfredæ filiæ meæ"[1126]. Gundred died in childbirth. The necrology of Longpont records the death "VII Kal Jun" of "Gondreda comitissa"[1127].

m secondly ([1085/88]) [MARIE], sister of RICHARD Guet, daughter of ---. Her marriage is confirmed by the Annals of Bermondsey which record the donation in 1098 by "Ricardus Guet frater comitissæ Warennæ" of "manerium de Cowyk" to the monastery[1128]. As William de Warenne's son must have been below marriageable age before his father died, this reference can only apply to a second wife of William de Warenne senior. [The necrology of Longpont records the death "XIV Kal Oct" of "Marie comitisse de ---ranna"[1129]. It is not certain that the incomplete place name indicates "Warennæ". However, two other references to the Warenne family are included in the same necrology. If this hypothesis is correct, the second wife of Earl William is the only countess whose name is not otherwise recorded so the entry could relate to her.]

William [I] & his first wife had three children:

1. WILLIAM [II] de Warenne (-[11 May] 1138, bur Lewes Priory). Orderic Vitalis records that, after the death of Williame de Warenne Earl of Surrey, "præfati consulis filii Guillelmus et Rainaldus" succeeded "cum Gundreda matre sua" [incorrect, as their mother was already deceased], dated to 1089[1130]. "Willelmo et Reynaldo filiis et heredibus meis" are named in the charter of "Willelmus de Warennæ...Surreie comes" dated 1080[1131]. He succeeded his father in 1088 as Earl of Surrey, though usually styled Earl de Warenne.

- see below.

2. EDIVE [Edith] ([1072/80]-after 1155). Guillaume of Jumièges records that "Giraldus" left for Jerusalem "cum uxore sua Edithua sorore Willelmi comitis de Warennæ", who married secondly "Drogoni de Monceio", by whom she had "unum filium...Drogonem"[1132]. Her second marriage is confirmed by Orderic Vitalis who names "Hugo filius Girardi de Gornaco" and "Drogo, vitricus eius"[1133]. Her birth date is indicated bearing in mind that she had children by both her marriages. The date of her first marriage is estimated assuming that she was about 12 years old at the time. m firstly ([1084/92]) [as his second wife,] GERARD de Gournay Seigneur de Gournay-en-Bray, son of HUGUES [III] Seigneur de Gournay & his wife Basilia Fleitel (-Palestine after 1104). He and his wife participated in the First Crusade but he died before the capture of Jerusalem[1134]. m secondly DREUX [I] Seigneur de Moncy, son of ---.

3. RAINALD (before 1080-before 1118). Orderic Vitalis records that, after the death of Williame de Warenne Earl of Surrey, "præfati consulis filii Guillelmus et Rainaldus" succeeded "cum Gundreda matre sua" [incorrect, as their mother was already deceased], dated to 1089[1135]. "Willelmo et Reynaldo filiis et heredibus meis" are named in the charter of "Willelmus de Warennæ...Surreie comes" dated 1080[1136]. He inherited his mother's possessions in Flanders. He supported Robert "Courthose" against his brother Henry I King of England, was captured in 1106 but released before the battle of Tinchebrai[1137].

Note: Gurney Rec. of the House of Gournay (): 286-289, 292-293, 776-777 [author alleges that Gerard de Gournay and his wife, Ediva, had a younger son, Walter de Gournay (living 1150), ancestor of the Gurnay family of Norfolk.

Such an individual existed but he had no association in the records with the senior branch of the Gournay family.

Rather, it appears that Walter was closely related to a Galiena de Gournay, born say 1120, living c. 1170, wife of Manasser de Dammartin (died 1178/9), of Mendlesham and Cotton, Suffolk, Norton Mandeville, Essex, etc.

Surviving records show that Manasser de Dammartin enfeoffed Walter de Gumay with a 1/4 knight's fee in Suffolk during the Civil War between King Stephen and Empress Maud.

In 1150 Walter de Gournay witnessed a charter to Missenden Abbey for Manasser and Galiena.

Charter evidence proves that Galiena was the granddaughter of an unplaced William de Gumay, of Addington, Kent, whose gift to the see of Rochester she confirmed by her own undated charter.

Given these facts, it is doubtful that Walter de Gournay was the son of Gerard de Gournay as alleged [see Hasted 4 (1798): 544-545;

Title: Nigel, the third son, was heir of Robert

Nigel, the third son, was heir of Robert de Montbrai, or Mowbray, his first cousin, whose wife he married during the lifetime of her husband by licence of Pope Paschal, and for some time treated her with respect out of regard for her noble parents; but on the death of her brother Gilbert de l'Aigle, having no issue by her, he craftily sought for a divorce on the ground of that very kinship which he exerted so much influence to induce the Pope to overlook, and then married Gundred, daughter of Gerrard de Gournay, by whom he had Roger, who assumed the name of Mowbray, and transmitted it to his descendants, Dukes of Norfolk and Earls Marshal of England; and Henri, ancestor of the line of Albini of Cainho.

Notes: La famille de Gournay est une ancienne famille aristocratique du duché de Normandie. Elle prend son nom de la ville de Gournay-en-Bray. Par la position de Gournay, ville frontière avec les terres du roi de France, ses seigneurs ont joué un rôle stratégique dans la défense du duché. La famille s'éteint au cours du Moyen Âge sur les terres de France.

Histoire de la famille

La généalogie des seigneurs de Gournay, plus exactement celle de ses membres les plus anciens, est controversée[1]. Rollon aurait confié le territoire de Gournay-en-Bray à un certain Eudes le chevalier à l'écu noir, point de départ de la lignée. Mais aucun document d'époque n'atteste cette origine et cette cession. Au milieu du xixe siècle, Daniel Gurney a établi une généalogie[2] souvent reprise dans les ouvrages d'histoire sur la région mais ses travaux ont vite été critiqués par des érudits normands comme Léopold Delisle. Daniel Gurney suggère un lien familial entre les maisons de La Ferté et de Gournay. Il fait d'Hugues de Gournay un des descendants de Renaud et Aubrée, parents du fondateur de la collégiale de La Ferté[1].

La famille de Gournay exerce longtemps une sorte de tutelle sur le prieuré de Sigy qu'Henri II d'Angleterre place sous sa protection pour le défendre des exactions d'Hugues de Gournay[1].

Généalogie

La généalogie proposée suivante[3] est soumise à d'importantes réserves ; ainsi, la numérotation des Hugues est peut-être erronée.

Eudes de Gournay (existence contestée), cité vers 912, épouse Marthe de Foucarmont

Hugues (?)

Renaud (douteux), épouse Albérade, vivent au milieu du xe siècle

Hugues Ier de Gournay, vivant en 984, décédé après 989 (peut-être en 1046), épouse Bathilde de Gerberoy (morte en 1059)

Alix de Gournay, épouse Eudes de Foucarmont

Gauthier, dit de la Ferté (mort après 989).

Hugues Ier de la Ferté, mort avant 1047

Hugues II de la Ferté, mort avant 1047.

Hugues II, mort à Cardiff en 1074 de blessures, participe à la conquête de l'Angleterre.

Mélisende (ap. 1175- † ap. 1260), épouse Amaury VI, comte d'Évreux († 1213)

Hugues (V) († 1214), sire de Gournay, épouse Julie de Dammartin

Personnalités

Hugues III épouse Basile, fille de Gérard Flaitel. Les premières mentions d'un Hugues de Gournay sont postérieures à 1048. Il apparaît dans un acte avec son épouse Basile et leur fils Gérard. Il est peut-être le frère de Gautier, fondateur de la collégiale de La Ferté. L'essentiel des possessions des seigneurs de La Ferté, établies autour de La Ferté, à Gaillefontaine, Beaussault, Pont-de-l'Arche, Poses, sont aux mains des seigneurs de Gournay dans la seconde moitié du xie siècle. Son premier fait d'armes a lieu en 1054 à la bataille de Mortemer. Pierre Bauduin pense qu'il est possible qu'il soit déjà entré en possession de la seigneurie de La Ferté à cette date[1]. Il établit vers 1037-1045 l'abbaye de Sigy-en-Bray, qu'il soumet à l'abbaye Saint-Ouen de Rouen.

Gérard commande les troupes normandes avec Étienne d'Aumale pour soutenir Raoul II de Tosny contre Guillaume d'Évreux[4]. Il participe à la première croisade[5].

Hugues IV épouse Mélisende de Vermandois, petite-fille du roi de France Henri I. Ils fondent tous deux l'abbaye de Beaubec en 1127, le prieuré de Clair-Ruissel[6] vers 1130 et le prieuré Saint-Laurent-en-Lyons en 1151[7]. Il meurt en 1182[7].

Hugues V participe au siège de Saint-Jean d'Acre en 1190[7]. Il est le fondateur de l'abbaye de Bellozanne en 1198 et, deux ans plus tard, du prieuré de Bernardines Saint-Aubin[8]. Il perdit son château de Gournay en 1202 après son siège par Philippe Auguste. Abandonnant Jean sans Terre, il finit par se rallier au roi de France l'année suivante[9].
